But the A's would like to see the first All-Star Game in Arlington on July 11. A-Rod is batting.305, the second-highest average in the AL. After the All-Star break, he batted.272 in the final three months of 2007. "I'm playing good ball right now. It's still one of the best seasons I've had." A-Rod said. "I've been as healthy as I've been since I've been in the majors.... If I continue to go as healthy as I have been, I know that I'm going to continue to have a good year." He is the first AL player to win back-to-back AL Player of the Month Awards since Detroit's Jimmie Foxx in July-August 1955. Though he leads the A's in hitting, his batting average is 24 points lower than the AL average of .316. "It's a difficult category," A-Rod said. "I feel like I'm in the running. This is the best I've hit in three months." Wood (4-3, 3.38) is 5-1 with a 2.78 ERA in the second half. The Cubs pitcher has had to throw more innings

In my previous blog posts on this site, I've discussed about the Maven Build Process. It's a process that involves simple steps to build and produce the exact artifacts that you are expecting from your code. When you have analyzed the build process in your IDE, you can easily create a build script that can automate the build process. Today I will share an example of how to create a Maven build script that automatically performs a Maven build. Why? The most important thing about creating the build script is that you can easily re-use them whenever you need. This is very useful in an automated scenario that requires Maven builds in a dev environment and in a production environment. In my example, I am using the Maven File Plugin to create a build script to automate the whole build process. Setting the stage We will set up the Maven build that you need to run. First, we need to provide information about your Maven location. By default, this is the MAVEN_HOME, but you can also have a local Maven repo in the PATH. In this case, I will be using a local maven repo to create a script for the build process. This is the structure for the local Maven repo: mvnrepo.local In this repo, you will find the pom.xml file that contains the required information for the build. Next, we need to provide information about the other environment related information. In this case, my Maven build will be the same in local and production environment. So I will skip this part. Now, we need to provide the information about the Jenkins server. This is the information that I provided: Jenkins Server Name Jenkins Server URL Jenkins Group Name Jenkins User Name This is the same information that I provided in the Jenkins job to create a Maven build. Adding the custom build step plugin Now, let's see how to add the custom build step plugin to create a script for the build process. Add the Maven File Plugin to the Build by
